vetoes:
To the Clerk and Aldermen of the City of the City of Owosso.
I hereby suspend the operation of the resolution ordering walk constructed in Bush's addition. E O Thomas' 2d addition, block 0, 10 and 11.8 K Barnes' addition.
A large portion of the walk ordered in is in front of vacant property where there is no demand for a walk. The walk is not asked for by persons living on the streets and there are good walks on the opposite side of the street. It is an unnecessary burden on the owners of the property with no partisular benefit to the public.

STANLEY E. PARKILL, Mayor.
July 25, 1905.

To the Clerk and Aldermen of the City of

I hereby suspend the operation of the resolution ordering crosswalks constructed at Oliver street, at Mulberry street and Pine street and at Elizabeth street, at Adams street and Water street.

This construction involves an expense of about two hundred dollars ($200). Oliver street is now well provided with crosswalks. The crosswalks on Elizabeth street are to be placed on the south side of the street where there is no sidewalk and no travel that requires either sidewalk and no travel that requires either sidewalks or crosswalks.

July 25, 1905. To the Clerk and Aldermen of the City of council has now ordered water mains lake that will cost from two thousand ($2,000) to twenty-five hundred dollars ($2,000) certainly a large enough expense to put into water mains in one year. I have filed in previous communications my objections to laying these mains. The reasons apply to this proposed extension as well. July 25, 1995,

The Kind You Have Always Bought Bears the Chat H. Flitcher. When Betty Spoke

By LOUISE J. STRONG

Copyright, 1905, by Louise J. Strong

Betty peeped out cautiously. She would not have them see her for a fortune. Yes, there was Bert, the center of the jolly crowd, and Addie at his elbow. That had been her (Betty's) place for so long that it had come to be considered- And it might have been hers yet if Bert had not- 'Oh, well, of course she was some to blame. It was not all Bert's fault. She admit ted that reluctantly, for Betty thought a good deal of her little self. He was dreadfully provoking, but they would have made up weeks ago if she had not gone to such lengths and reared an impassable barrier between them.

"And that's the truth, Betty Brown! she apostrophized now. "Why did I do such a ridiculous thing? I might just have said I'd never speak to him again; girls always say that. And I ought to have stopped there, but when he grinned so knowingly, as if there was nothing in that, as there isn't usually, I let it provoke me into declaring that if I ever did speak to him again it would be because I had made up my mind to marry him. Why, it will be the same as proposing if I ever speak to him now, when I've evaded- I can never do it," she sighed.

Bert had not been greatly crushed by her ultimatum. He spoke to her cordially at every opportunity in spite of her nonresponse with something like elated expectancy in his manner that stung Betty to a more determined stubbornness.

"I suppose he thinks I will, but he'll see," she said firmly.

She had persisted in ignoring him icily until at length he seemed to conclude that it was hopeless and avoided meeting her. All the time, of course, Betty had been hoping he would, some how, make her speak, though she would not have confessed it, nor the disappointment she felt at his finally aban doning his efforts and accepting the situation.

She flirted desperately, which gave her small satisfaction, as it apparently did not disturb him in the least. He flirted, too, and so fervidly that it began to look serious in regard to Addie Stark. Betty felt that she was losing all the fun of life and all the joy as well.

She had simulated successfully a gayety of spirits almost boisterous at the moonlight skating party, but had really been so miserable at seeing those two, Bert and Addie, gliding about, always together, that she had determined not to go to the coasting route. She had refused all offers of escort, but now, at the passing of the gay party, she suddenly changed her mind, whipped on her suit, tucked the becoming cap on her curls and darted after Ned and his chum, who had just started.

"Tagging!" Ned chaffed. But he made no objection, for Betty was as good at coasting as any boy of them, fully as fearless and as fleet footed, alleys, through back yards and over fences, going across lots the nearest way. Thus when the crowd arrived Miss Betty was triumphantly sailing down the longest, steepest course with the yelling boys, cheered by the mob of town youths usually on the hill.

. Most of the girls confined themselves to the short, easy slope at the side, unless in charge of a strong, capable escort.

"It is dangerous, just with those boys, Betty," remonstrated her friend, Alice Hoover.

"And it is unladylike for a girl to go floundering down with a gang of fellows," commented Addie Stark, supercillously.

"You don't dare to, that's all," Betty retorted. "I'm not the only one. Bert said"-Bert's appearance cut short the speech, and, laughing shrilly, Betty ran away to the boys and coaxed them over to a still steeper spot, where only the more skillful and daring ventured. Her blood was boiling! So Bert had been criticising her to Addie! It seemed the boldest treachery. As for Addle-the little cat!-she was envious because she had not the courage to undertake the long descent. She looked scornfully over at Bert, taking tame little flights, with Addie clinging to him shricking in exaggerated fear. Betty knew how he loved the rush of the long hill, with the jounce at the end that sent them flying across the bottom. They had taken it together many times. Now it was unladylike of her, was itand she with her own brother!

Her indignation grew, and with it her recklessness. Little by little she drew the boys toward the post that bore a danger sign, which marked the limit of the coasting ground. Beyond the post the hill was fine, but at the foot the railroad swung up against it as it curved to cross the river, and it was not easy to see a train till it was close it hand. It was plainly no place for coasting, though a few ventured at times, the spice of danger adding zest to the sport.

Betty had always wanted to swoop down and fly across the track, perhaps catching sight of an oncoming train. It would be thrilling! But she had no intention of undertaking it now, though in the mood to go as near it as possible.

"Look out, Ned!" some one called. 'You're getting too close there! Better come back." "There isn't a bit of danger," Betty laughed as they flashed by. "But you'd better come over here," Will White urged when Betty and the boys had climbed the hiff and were preparing to descend again. "You're so close now a little bump would throw you on the track. Don't you see that, Betty?" Alice interposed anxiously. "Oh, Betty wants to show off!" Addle sneered, and unfortunately at the same instant Bert commanded: "Ned, you boys bring your sleds over here at once! You're foolhardy!" With scarlet cheeks and flashing eyes Betty snatched a sled and ran to a point directly over the railroad and prepared for a downward flight alone. Command her, would he? Of course he meant her! She'd show him! There was an uproar of warning shouts from the young men and shricks from the girls, but Betty was too angry to heed. As she started another sled shot down diagonally and midway the hill ran into hers, throwing them both into the deeper snow, where they rolled over and over and brought up at last in a tangle on the brink of a plunge just as a train swept along below.

White and shaking at the narrow escape, Betty took herself off the head of her rescuer, sobbing: "Oh, Bert, Bert! Have I killed you?" At the instant of collision she had seen who it was attempting to stay her foolish flight at the risk of his life. She had been too angry and excited to understand that a train was coming-but she had been silly-so silly!"

She covered her face as Bert sat up, saying as he brushed the snow from his eyes:

"It's got to be soon, sweetheart, so can take proper care of my wife!" "But you called me unladylike to Addie, and this would be"-

"It's a mistake. When Addie called you unladylike I said you were just a good, sweet, wholesome girl and no finicky lady," he explained, adding calmly: "They think we are about killed, we are so long stirring. They'll be on us in a minute, but we sit here till we understand there's no going back on what you said. You've spoken to me, you know."

"Y-yes," she admitted faintly. "And you'll fulfill your word soon?

They're most here!" "Y-yes," she said again, blushing

And he swung her to her feet as the crowd surged about them.

American After Dinner Wit. "After Dinner Oratory In America" appears to be one of the subjects forever interesting to the British reader. The manner of it would seem to pique him a little and shock him at the same time. In the Nineteenth Century Daniel Crilly gives some account of the origin of the peculiar American habit of treating serious matters humorously after dinner and contrasts a banquet in New York with, say, a Mansion House dinner in London. He quotes Lowell's ingredients of after dinner oratory, "They are," said Lowell, "the joke, the quotation and the platitude, and the successful platitude, in my judgment, requires a very high order of genius." As an example of American wit Mr. Crilly gives the follow-

"I chanced to be in Chicago (said this gentleman at a dinner board to a company of fellow New Englanders) two or three days after the great fire of and now she rushed with them down | 1871. As I walked among the smoking ruins if I saw a man with a cheerful air I knew that he was a resident of Chiengo. If I saw a man with a long face I knew that he represented a Hartford Insurance company. Really the cheerful resignation with which the Chicago people endured the losses of New England did honor to human nature."

Prisoners of a Great City.

A husband and his wife, respectable looking, and well dressed, recently moved into a detached house in the Bronx. They were very quiet and did not mingle with their neighbors, but seemed to enjoy their surroundings, particularly the garden, in which they began work at once, Of course the neighbors were curious, but all early efforts to find out who the couple were or where they came from proved of no avail. Finally one of the neighbors, meeting the man one day, asked him outright how long he had lived in New York and what his business was.

"Our past is a secret," said the man, "and we are trying to live it down. My wife and I have just completed a long term in prison, and we are now quietly enjoying life."

"Well," said the neighbor, "I am astonished at what you tell me. But I for one do not want to continue to punish those who have paid the penalty of errors in life. What prison were you confined in, may I ask?" A merry twinkle came into the eyes of the man as he said: "It was a Harlem flat. We were confined there three years!"-New York Press.

Dealing With Bores.

An amusing incident is related of the efforts of certain devotees of cards at a club in New York to rid themselves of unwelcome suggestions as to their style of play vouchsafed by bores who persisted in standing about and looking over the heads of the players. One evening one of the players, perhaps the most skillful of any of the members of the club, could endure the nulsance no longer. Rising, he politely asked one of the bores to play the hand for him until his return. The bore took the cards, and the player left the room. Soon afterward the second player followed the example of the first. The two substitutes played for awhile without observing the lapse of time. Finally one of them called an attendant and asked: "Where are the gentlemen who were playing here awhile ago?" The attendant grinned. "They're in

THE WORK IN IOWA.

Reasons Why One New Grange Wa Recently Organized.

Grange work in Iowa seems to be one of the great grange states, having Adams St . Chicago. for a time over 2,000 subordinate granges, but at the present time its granges are so few as not to entitle it to representation in the national grange. But there are evidences that the grange spirit is again reviving and that Iowa will soon again be represented in the national body. A grange was recently organized at Matlock, Sloux county, Ia., with Hon, Luther Bishop, former state senator, at its head. He was for years prominent grange organizer in New York state. Sate Senator Kimmell is also active in promoting grange work at Sheldon, Ia. It is interesting to note why Matlock grange was organized. A committee of five of the best farmers of that section was appointed to investigate all existing farmers' organizations and report which seemed the best adapted to the needs of the farmers in that section. After a long investigation the committee unanimously re ported in favor of the grange for the reasons that its membership is by far the greatest of any farmers' organization in the world, it has a record of usefulness in legislation in nearly every state in the union and its influence in national legislation has always been for the farmers' interests.

Two Illinois Granges. The Earlville grange of Lasalle county, Ill., reports ninety-four candidates initiated during the quarter just passed. That's a fine record. Members of this grange are to erect a grain elevator. Another flourishing Illinois grange is located in St. Clair county, known as Turkey Hill grange. The members are building one of the finest grange balls in Illinois, to cost about $4,000. It is 36 by 54 feet, two stories. A new piano will form part of the furnishings.

Garrettsville grange, Portage county, recently spent $60 for costumes. They are classical and lend a charm to the work than can be secured in no other way. Electric lights are thrown on the "Three Graces," who pose in appropriate postures.

State Master Derthick of Ohio will spend one week each in New Jersey and New York in field work. He is one of the best speakers in the National grange.
